

STREET STYLE MEMORY GAME²

Photographed at the corner of my street in Amsterdam

I always wonder what makes me turn to look at one passerby rather than another, while I am mostly indifferent to the rest. I observe them a few seconds and try to imagine what they are thinking while they are walking.

Why are my eyes drawn to these people? I don't think it has anything to do with beauty or aesthetics, but more with their general attitude. They all have an 'intangible something' that reflects into their expression. It's as if their body and face entirely embrace their personality.

This year once again I couldn't resist interrupting the lives of these interesting personalities.

Can you put these people back together again? Match their top and bottom halves to win this memory game.
