The wide watercolor palette offers 36 bright and vivid colors from zinc white over lemon yellow, coral orange, sky blue, mint green, lilac purple, brick brown to lamp black. The colors appear shiny and rich on paper. The generous choice of colors saves you time to mix the colors one by one. Add a little bit of water to the color you want to use and pick the paint up with a brush. You can daub the paint on the mixing palette first for more controlled application on the paper. The watercolors come in a firm box out of hard plastic that is compact and safe to transport.

The woohoo4u® watercolor paint set includes two water tank brushes. Unscrew the brushes in the middle and fill them up with tap water. When painting, push softly on the brush to exert water. The round brush is perfect for painting details, strokes and leaves. The flat brush can be used to cover a big area with paint i.e. when painting the background.

The sponge can be used to apply paint in a dotted way i.e. when painting leaves of trees, stars in a night sky or snow. By varying the water and paint level on the sponge, the dots appear bigger or smaller.

An integrated mixing palette can be fixed on one of the sides of the water color box. Use the mixing palette to create new colors or to vary the pigmentation level of the existing colors.

The woohoo4u® Watercolor Paint Set contains a thank you envelope with 10 watercolor pads (160 gsm). You can use these pads to paint a full palette of the colors, do sketching or create first artwork.

GETTING STARTED

As a first step we advise you to try out all colors by painting a color palette and numbering the colors. Try to create a gradient from intense color by picking up a lot of paint with a little bit of water to light color by picking up a little bit of paint with a lot of water. This way you will know how the colors appear on paper and how their intensity varies depending on the water level. The painted watercolor palette is a helpful tool when you need to find the most fitting color for your art work. You will also know where to find the color by numbering the palette.

The sponge can be used to apply paint as dots i.e. when painting trees (pic. on the left), stars or snow. To do so, mix the color you need with enough water on the mixing palette. Dip the sponge into the color first, then softly touch the paper with the sponge. The more water you add to the pre-mixed paint, the bigger the dots will appear. For very small dots, apply just a little bit of water and a lot of paint.

BASIC WATERCOLOR TECHNIQUES

There are two basic watercolor techniques that are used in almost every painting, wet on wet and wet on dry.

Wet on wet is a technique that allows the paint to smoothly run into each other and expand on the paper. You will need this technique for example if you want to paint a sunset sky or create a blurry background. As a first step, apply clean water to the watercolor paper and let the paper suck the water for a little bit. While the watercolor paper is still wet, add paint to the paper and let the colors blend into each other.

The wet on dry technique is very useful for controlled and detailed application of paint. In this case you need to apply paint, eventually already thinned with water, on dry paper. The paint stays within the borders that you paint with the brush. This technique is mostly used when painting the foreground and details.
